Tuesday, September 24, 2006 I often think about what I'd like to see in a "good" thriller. The type of book where you're swept along by the story and willing to put all your important bits in place, forget about all the elementary rules of logic, and stay glued to the pages for the sake of the story. And yet, when I'm reading, I notice that I go back to areas I've already read, and I'm anxious for the suspense to build again. I'm finding that there are times when I really want to NOT read, but there are other times when I'm dying to pick up the book and start reading again. I have about 15 titles in my TBR that I'd like to read right now, and there are more on my Wish List. There are books that I can't imagine ever not wanting to read. But that desire isn't new. There were times in the past when I felt like that about the books I was reading. I'm curious to find out if the experience is different when it comes to series. Monday, September 23, 2006 I've tried to post two or three times, and I always come away saying, "I should make a list." My list has accumulated over the years. It's not complete, but it is revealing in ways that I may not have seen before. GINBS by Matthew Marrone The title is, in fact, an acronym for the initials of the four main characters in the book. It's a Gothic-Urban-Neo-Boysey-Spartan-Bramblesy, based on "GINBS" from the theme song to Hannah Montana (shown below). What doesn't get played often enough is the fact that it features everything I love about Gothic novels: cemeteries and witchcraft, but also something that is talked about in few novels, the ghosts of World War II soldiers. I can't say much more without spoiling the book for anyone who hasn't read it, but I will add that there are a lot of familiar features about the book that I loved. I haven't been a fan of "YA" novels, but this one made me say, "you got this." It's not perfect, but it is really well done. Tuesday, September 17, 2006 On Sunday I stumbled across a shirt that doesn't have a small child on it. I thought at first

The Magic Wand tool is a quick and easy way to isolate specific areas of an image that are of the same color. You can use the tool to select the entire photograph, or to select a small area of an image. The Magic Wand tool selects specific areas of an image based on the colors they contain. It's helpful for selecting portions of an image, or for editing an image. The Pen tool is a good way to create a line or shape. Use the Pen tool to draw straight lines, curves, or even to trace an image. The Text tool allows you to write text, and to apply different font, style, and size options. Some fonts are preinstalled in Photoshop, but you can also download more. When using the Pen tool, you can use different colors to create a sketchy or sketchy appearance.
