Because Photoshop is so robust and has so many features, please take your time exploring the program, and if you do find a feature that you can't learn how to use, then make a note of it so you can look it up later. Often, the feature can be switched on in the user interface by going to the Tools menu, and selecting the option to be on or off. Changing the size of an image Photoshop is a raster program, meaning that it manipulates the pixels in an image. It cannot format the type of font used or how the picture is framed. However, you can make adjustments that approximate a type size, such as reducing the size of a character in a text layer. To resize an image, follow these steps: 1. Select the image and choose Image⇒Image Size⇒Fit to Fit Image. The Image Size dialog box opens with the Image Size settings. You can find more options in Image Size by clicking the More Image Size Options button. You also can find additional options by clicking the down arrow to the right of the three plus and minus symbols. If you're in a hurry, you can resize the image with the commands in Step 2. 2. Enter a height and width measurement for the image. 3. Click OK. You have resized the image. If you change the image size, the new dimensions appear in the Width and Height text boxes, as shown in Figure 3-3. Figure 3-3: Resizing an image. Creating a Gradient Overlay Some software programs let you control the colors on an image, such as creating a nice gray or color gradient to appear on the gray background in Figure 3-4. This is called a gradient overlay. The colors in a gradient change in proportion, creating a smooth transition of colors. You can build the gradient by clicking the Gradient tool, which is a default tool in the toolbar, and dragging across the canvas to create the gradient. You can create more than one gradient on an image. After you create a gradient, you should know that the width and height of the original image will remain unchanged, and the resulting gradient will move with the original width and height. Figure 3-4: A gradient is like a rainbow: it's a series of colors that appear to change as the image is viewed in the real world. Cellulose acetate butyrate (CAB) is a known thermoplastic that is useful as a coating for wire and cables, e.g., a sheath for those used in cold weather. Useful CAB compositions typically contain a cross-linking agent that promotes cross-linking or cross-linking by irradiation. It is also known to provide a thermosetting binder system in a CAB composition, and to use such a system in a cured-state with a cross-linking agent and an irradiating agent to provide another thermoplastic. See, for example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,933,729, the disclosure of which is incorporated by reference herein. Heretofore, the known CAB-containing compositions have been cured thermally. In curing, however, the CAB is heated from about 25.degree. C. to about 150.degree. C., during which time the fiber substrates are also heated. The prior thermally cured CAB compositions do not have excellent electrical properties when used as a sheath or as a binder. Additionally, the prior compositions do not have good electrical properties when used as a jacketing, i.e., the extruded CAB composition is not capable of dissipating high ampere-turns. Thus, there is a need for a process wherein the CAB-containing compositions can be irradiated and cured at lower temperatures, yet provide good electrical properties for a binder and for the jackets used to isolate wire. This invention is based on the discovery that a CAB composition containing a thermosetting binder in an amount sufficient for the composition to be capable of being extruded can be extruded as a jacket and extruded as a coated wire sheath after being irradiated and cured at a temperature of about 50.degree. C. or less, and can then be post-extruded to a higher temperature to cure the thermosetting binder to form the wire sheath.Q: MySQL : Subquery returns more than 1 row error in stored procedure I have written a stored procedure in MySQL workbench to insert into a table with a join condition.
