Q: How to not take the first line of a text file and put it as an input at the beginning of another text file? I'm trying to not take the first line of a text file and put it as an input at the beginning of another text file. I'm using `grep -n` to find the line, and I'm trying to use `sed` to change that line into an input (I can achieve that) but I can't find a way to do that. I tried with `sed -n -i`, it gives me that error: `-n option is used before other operands` My idea: 1. I need to get an input for a bash script 2. I need to put the line from text file 1 at the beginning of text file 2. A: You can use this `sed` command: `sed '/^\(.\) /q; { N; s/ \([^ ]\) /&1/g }' input.txt > output.txt`
