It has to be said that my friends are much better parents than me. Still, whenever I took my kids to the cinema, I never felt either of them that they needed the comic books. They played "the right games" and I think I proved that I'm a sportsman. But what I do need is, after a long round of home games, to take my kids to a cinema to see a good football movie like, "Inside United". They can fill their minds with some quality fiction. Unfortunately this is not that kind of film. It's a drama movie about a football (Soccer) team. Forget it.

You'll hear about the most boring, banal things from any football team. You'll know everything about each member of the team, including how he passed the ball, etc. It makes no difference to your kids. If it was a film about a theatre troupe, it wouldn't be as it is. I don't even know why it's called Inside United. It's so it's not the only team. Who cares? It just dragged on and on, and the only interesting things happened when the great John Terry showed up, and he was called John… and as the great Terry's hair was shorn, I found myself smiling at the TV in front of me. I wonder why it's called Inside United.

For the longest time, I had trouble differentiating between solo bass and solo piano. They have the same timbre, the same dynamics, and the same articulation. However, I think the one major difference in the bass line is that the lute played on a solo piano line is not played with a picking motion. However, I recently started seeing a lot of bass players playing the bass line on a single note, so it is impossible to tell where it is coming from, although most of
