Q: Setting up a live stream using php, mongod and a perl script I'm trying to do the following: I want to put a file with text "hello world" in a directory "/" Then i have a perl script that will read the file, and then call a mongoDB server to set up a "live" stream on port 27017 Let's say the perl script prints "hello world" every second. My problem is that I'm not able to start mongoDB server. When I run ./mongo from my directory where the perl script is located, I have no problem. However, when I run mongod from the same directory where the perl script is, the server starts but it says that there is no journal and can't start a journal. I can't find a clear solution to this problem, does anyone have any idea? Thanks! A: The issue here is the paths you have set. Start MongoDB with the path to your mongo files set for the -pid and -logpath options: mongod --pid /path/to/mongo/data/pid --logpath /path/to/mongo/data/logs If you are starting the server from within the same directory, MongoDB will try to find the PID and logpath in the current directory. Since this is not the case for you, the location of the PID is not correct and it does not get the logs either. WASHINGTON — When it comes to the two-state solution, they can't say much. Even President Donald Trump seems to have little new to say. But the handful of Israelis and Palestinians who met with the president Thursday did have some answers. And the president seems to have listened. "Israel will only accept a state with boundaries that will be agreed upon," added a second participant, echoing comments made on Wednesday by Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas. "I have full confidence that in the end, we will get there." Trump said: "

Friday, February 15, 2018 HVAC air intake systems are typically installed in vehicles, such as passenger and commercial vehicles, to provide a supply of air to the internal combustion engine. As such, the air filter often included in the intake system of the engine must be changed regularly. Among the problems with conventional air filter systems is that the filter media often loosens or becomes dislodged during use. If the filter media becomes dislodged, the filter media will not effectively remove particles from the air or dirt and dust that is being drawn into the engine with the air. Such particles can damage the engine and shorten its lifespan. Another problem is that if the filter media becomes dislodged, the occupants of the vehicle may be tempted to manipulate the filter media to bypass or bypass the filter media thereby causing the filter media to become dislodged and possibly damaging the engine. Thus, filter systems that utilize filter media that is fixed in place in
