Cardiovascular disease (CVD) is the main cause of death in adults with type 2 diabetes (T2D). In the present study, we hypothesized that the benefits of exercise training (ET) in adults with T2D are associated with improvements in CVD risk. Thirty-six obese children (27 ± 4 years) were evaluated before and after an 8-week (1 session/week) ET program. An incremental exercise test was used to evaluate the baseline cardiorespiratory fitness (CRF), and left ventricular (LV) and aortic (Ao) function was evaluated by Doppler echocardiography.
