CutWizard editor for CorelDraw + CleanerPro 8.Effects of glucagon-like peptide-1 and related peptides on leukocyte adhesion to venular endothelium in vivo. Glucagon-like peptide-1 (GLP-1) is an incretin hormone secreted by intestinal L cells that stimulate insulin secretion and inhibit glucagon secretion and gastric emptying in the presence of food. The antidiabetic activity of exogenous GLP-1 results in part from inhibition of intestinal absorption of glucose via effects on intestinal glucose-dependent insulinotropic polypeptide (GIP) secretion. Although some evidence indicates that GLP-1 also can inhibit other forms of glucose-dependent insulin secretion, the effect of GLP-1 on peripheral insulin resistance is uncertain. We hypothesize that GLP-1-induced increases in insulin and inhibition of gastric emptying, as well as direct effects of GLP-1 on peripheral glucose disposal in adipose tissue, might also contribute to its antidiabetic action. We have investigated effects of exogenous GLP-1 on leukocyte adhesion, a process that participates in the pathophysiology of endothelial damage in diabetes and inflammatory bowel disease. We used the hamster cheek pouch microcirculation as a model of the venular endothelium. In a group of hamsters, a submaximal dose of exogenous GLP-1 induced a dose-dependent reduction in leukocyte adherence from a steady-state intravascular level of approx. 0.3×10^6 cells/cm² to an approximate level of 0.1×10^6 cells/cm². This reduction in leukocyte adhesion was abolished by a GLP-1 receptor antagonist, suggesting that the effect of GLP-1 is mediated by the GLP-1 receptor. In a second group of hamsters, GLP-1 reduced leukocyte adherence at a dose similar to that effective in the first group, but abolished the increase
