Creating Vector and Non-Vector Graphics One of the most exciting aspects of the development of the computer industry is the emergence of vector graphics, or graphics in which points and lines instead of pixels are used as a representation of a printed or electronic image. Because vector graphics are computer-based and use fewer files and filesize, they are very easy to manipulate. Vector graphics are also easier to scale down in print sizes. Figure 12-4 illustrates the difference between a vector graphic and a raster image. In a raster image, each pixel is represented by a dot on an x and y axis and each dot is mapped to a shade or color of a given color spectrum or a given color intensity. A vector graphic creates a point in an infinite space and then can create lines, and any other shape is created by drawing a series of points. Vector graphics are not limited by the size of pixels, therefore a low-resolution image can be opened in Photoshop, scaled to any size, and printed without distorting the image. In a raster image, the lowest resolution image must be as large as the pixel grid. To illustrate, Figure 12-5 shows a camera photo printed at 800 dots per inch (dpi) and an exact comparison of the same photo printed at 300 dpi. While the image is smaller at 300 dpi, the pixels have to be more closely spaced together. As a result, there is significant distortion at the borders and line widths change. Figure 12-4 Raster image example showing a photo printed at a lower resolution (300 dpi) compared to a higher resolution (800 dpi). Figure 12-5 A photo printed at different resolutions (300 vs. 800 dpi)

Q: Round/cut corner image I have an image with rounded corners. I want to take that rounded corner image as a background for that rounded corner div. The problem is the background image is showing only half of the rounded corner effect. When I use the background image like: `.someDiv { background: url(images/background.jpg); background-repeat:no-repeat; background-position:center; width:600px; height:450px; overflow:visible; }` The image gets loaded to full width but it has a different background. I don't want a transparent background. How can I make a rounded background image to fit the div? A: You can use CSS3 to do rounded corners. It is actually part of the specification, so it's not limited to browsers that support it. The example below only uses the simple CSS corner-radius styles, but you can add any of the other properties to modify the corners as you like. (See the full specification here.) `div { width:200px; height:200px; background: #fefefe; -webkit-background-clip: padding-box; -moz-background-clip: padding; background-clip: padding-box; } div:after { width:200px; height:200px; content:''; position:absolute; top:0; bottom:0; left:0; right:0; border-radius: 50%; background: #fff; }` I'm not sure why the background isn't showing on the div itself if it's loading from its own URL (it's showing correctly here). Maybe it has to do with your Joomla configuration somehow? A: Use this: `background-image:url`

This is working quite well and I want to add additional information that the user can see by hovering over different parts of the map. As it is now, the map is getting loaded on the server and the events are handled by the server. This works without problems. But what I want to do is to update the content of the div that contains the events on the server. Something like: `EventManager.observe(map);` Then update content of my div. Does anyone know how to do this? A: You can generate and manipulate divs on the client side. You could build a small script that polls your server for event information and change content of a predefined div for each event. Two psychological approaches to the study of hormone-receptor relationships. The classic hormone-receptor relationship, in which a hormone induces specific
