Q: Method of using the.on() method to call a function I have a function that runs through each LI tag of an unordered list. Red Blue Green Yellow Magenta Cyan White I have the function to run on each LI and change the color of the list item. `$(".colors li").on('click',function(){ $(this).css('color','white'); });` What I'm wondering is if there is a way to run this function on all li tags within the parent ul without having to write each one of the li tags. A: You could use the.find() method to locate the parent container of all the "li" tags and then target it. // Looking for the parent container `$(ul.colors).find('li').on('click', function(){ // Then targeting the "li" tag inside that $(this).css('color','white'); });` However, there is a flaw in the rest of your script. You seem to be calling the function on the li element that was clicked on. This means that what you're actually doing is setting all li elements within the ul to white.

The last part of the needle is the needle tip of the injector, which is part of the injector body or even the injector pump. Thus, the tip of the injector is made from a harder and sharper material than the material used for the injector itself, allowing it to puncture the skin or
