Eudora Welty's short story 'No Place of Shining Memory' hit the shelves in 1961, but it was written before she had a career as a writer. With My Brother's Keeper, the moving and beautifully written story of a strong young woman in her late twenties, to W.P. Kinsella's earliest novel, Lincoln in Pine Ridge. Edwin J. Finkel offers us a collection of interviews that constitute a milestone in the field of psychology. Finkel shows that these interviews do not focus only on theories, but on their practitioners, their speculations, and their results. The subjects include not only psychologists, but artists, poets, and other scholars. The challenges that faced interviewees were encountered in a society that made gender and intellectualism a special, and controversial, topic. Finkel has compiled interviews from 1963 to 1984 with over 50 participants in psychology, including psychiatrists, psychologists, and psychiatrists, as well as artists, poets, and literary theorists.
