Progesterone receptor expression in human endometrial carcinoma tissues determined by immunohistochemistry. To investigate the expression of progesterone receptors (PR) in endometrial carcinomas and correlate the expression with the clinical outcome. A total of 107 endometrial carcinoma patients who underwent surgery at our hospital between July 2007 and June 2008 were included in this study. The clinicopathologic features and survival data of the patients were recorded. The paraffin sections were stained by immunohistochemical (IHC) staining with monoclonal anti-PR antibody. The relationship between PR expression in the endometrial carcinomas and the clinicopathologic parameters was evaluated. Of the 107 patients, 58 (54.21%) were postmenopausal, and 49 (45.79%) were premenopausal. A total of 60 patients (56.14%) had endometrial carcinomas of grade I, 49 (44.95%) had grade II, and 8 (7.48%) had grade III. Only 29 (26.91%) of the 107 patients had a tumor stage of I. A total of 32 patients (29.4%) had lymph node metastasis. The PR expression was positive in 54 of the 107 endometrial carcinomas (50.45%). The expression of PR was correlated with advanced stage, histologic grade, lymph node metastasis, and survival status. In univariate analysis, in the patients with high-grade tumors, lymph node metastasis, and a poor prognosis, the PR expression was related to the survival. There was no statistically significant correlation between PR expression and other variables. In the multivariate analysis, PR expression was the only independent prognostic factor that affected the survival (P = 0.01). ER expression had no correlation with any other factors. PR expression in endometrial carcinomas is associated with poor prognosis. A PR

The hanging-drop approach permits the reliable formation of highly uniform cell microdroplets in a microculture system. These microdroplets contain single cells or small cell populations and are therefore amenable to the simultaneous or sequential culture of multiple cell types. In order to characterize the potential usefulness of the hanging-drop system in cell-cell interaction studies, we have adapted the hanging-drop technique to generate microdroplets containing the theca cells (an ovarian granulosa cell type) from the ovary of the sea urchin Echinometra lucunter and the oligochaete Tylospora aquatica. Freshly isolated theca cells and oligochaetes were incubated in the presence of a small volume of
