The eurozone just put a down payment on a new, 10-year bailout plan, which just means more bailout money for struggling countries like Greece. The aid package, worth $863 billion, will cover Greece for the next two years and then meet its obligation for the next decade. The Institute for New Economic Thinking has issued a list of 20 specific reforms eurozone member countries should implement. The list of 20 reforms is based on a report that was released in June and is a complete reversal of the Italian-led reform agenda. The problem is that Italy was never really in trouble on its own, but the Greek bailout is a perfect example of the failure of the austerity agenda. Three-quarters of the Greek government is unionized, and the International Labor Organization (ILO) says that labor unrest could last up to two years. But the deal gives every sign that it will fail. Greece cannot pay what it owes without cutting essential services and pensions. Companies outside of the new government could become insolvent. And how the debt will be traded on the secondary market is uncertain; Greece is not a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and it has not indicated whether it would participate. The real question is how to navigate the global market if Greece's debt should ever be called into question. The Greek government has indicated that it would renege on its debts, and many in the German government don'
