Citrix CSiBridge GSI 19.2 R1 Crack (2018).Two-stage anterior cervical discectomy and fusion using auto-bone, and a prospective controlled study. A prospective controlled study. To evaluate the clinical and radiological results of two-stage ACDF using auto-bone in comparison with the conventional ACDF. ACDF is the standard procedure for the treatment of cervical degenerative disorders. We have previously found out that anterior cervical discectomy and auto-bone grafting leads to more stable anterior cervical spine than one-stage conventional ACDF. However, clinical and radiological results of this two-stage procedure still have not been clearly established. The authors performed a prospective cohort study of 106 consecutive patients who underwent a two-stage cervical discectomy using auto-bone, followed by an ACDF with allograft for cervical degenerative disorders. The mean age of the patients at the initial operation was 53.9 years (range, 38-67 years). The mean follow-up period was 54.9 months (range, 25-72 months). Clinical and radiological evaluations were performed at the final follow-up. The intraoperative blood loss was lesser in the auto-bone group than in the allograft group. The mean blood loss was 567.3 mL (range, 535-935 mL) and 564.6 mL (range, 515-795 mL) in the auto-bone and allograft groups, respectively. Neck disability index (NDI) and visual analog scale (VAS) scores were significantly improved after surgery in both groups. In the auto-bone group, the mean NDI and VAS scores improved from 38.5 to 9.5 and from 7.2 to 1.2, respectively, and the mean Japanese Orthopaedic Association (JOA) score improved from 10.0 to 16.5. In the allograft group, the mean NDI and VAS scores improved from 35.5 to 11.5 and from 6.5 to 0.8, respectively, and the mean JOA score improved from 11.5 to 17.0. In the auto-
