A: The open source license of AForge.net is actually the old SunAFL license, it is "do what you want but don't use it in any commercial products or for-profit projects" It is currently owned by the author of AForge.net. The current licensing status is "unknown", but it most likely is currently under the "do what you want but don't use it in any commercial products or for-profit projects" terms. 10.25.2014 If you follow my instagram feed, you've seen a few of my DIY project featuring adhesive colored markers.

These were made because I wanted to try out the permanent markers and wanted some designs that were just a bit more fun. I figured out that if I could build something out of something else (materials), I could incorporate colorful rub-ons into the design and still have a change to be creative. I incorporated this idea into my planner layout. To make a DIY project like this, you need the right tool, a permanent marker, a wide variety of colored adhesive rub-ons,
