On the contrary, juggling a busy life with your career, your family and your health can be difficult. But the mothers at the top of their games have done just that. Gritty, no-nonsense moms are stars in their own right. Dez Bryant's mom hasn't been shy to talk about her son's career. She's been in the front of the media pack, speaking about it and showing some enthusiasm. Last year, she was in the news when she crashed a party for her son's former college team, the Cowboys. Recently, she told "ESPN," "He is a brother, so he has my blessing when he does what he wants to do. I'm going to respect that. But what's good for him is good for me. That's just the way it goes. It's not like I'm going to say, 'Oh, no, no, no.' But yes, we're going to support him." Charlton Heston's mom was a guidance counselor before he died in 2005. But she's still actively involved with his children, naming her youngest son Charlton, after her lost son. She's been active in politics and active with her sons, spending most of her weekends at their outdoor basketball court. She's been in the spotlight for much of their lives and is happy to just be there and watch them play. "The great thing for me is that we are family, so I don't have to worry about what's going on outside the house." Ronda Rousey's mom also worked as a guidance counselor in her day. Rousey has even called her "the coolest mom in the world." "My mom is supportive of all of us. She has been a big help to me, especially in college with my business and choosing the right classes. She has a great grasp on business and marketing, and I'm a huge fan of hers. d0c515b9f4
