Designs are expected to be finished by the end of 2021.The boat will have a top speed of 35 knots, a length of 18 meters (60ft), a width of 9 meters (30ft) and a draft of 1.62 metres (5ft). Interoperability with other NATO ships, such as the Royal Navy's Spearfish and the US Navy's X-craft, is planned. The boat will be able to tow an unmanned underwater vehicle, and will also carry up to 15 men, a helicopter, two anti-submarine torpedoes and missiles, and mines. This is roughly equivalent to a Landing Craft Mechanized (LCM) or a Landing Craft Assault (LCA). The type of machine gun and weapon bay placement for the new ship will determine what armaments it can carry. [See the Italian Navy page for more info and the video below]The Alcione will be designed in CPO, a one-person European consortium that includes several Italian firms. Researchers and members of the CPO found the design used in the Alcione a good basis for the new ship. Italian media have called the ship a re-shaped Amphion, a reference to the Greek myth of the ship that sailed the oceans and that was used by King Minos to massacre all his suitors. The Alcione, however, is designed to carry out a specific mission and not be used as a frontline warship. Italy currently deploys six landing craft of the Ammiraglio Ferrarini class on transport ships, twelve torpedo boats, and four support ships. The new boat should be able to sail at 35 knots (60 km/h), giving it an effective operating
