The Trump Administration's plan to restore a major shooting range to the Southern California desert could undo decades of environmental progress in the Mojave Desert and threaten rare and threatened species, according to biologists, scientists and conservation groups. The Mojave Desert is the largest single desert in North America and home to nearly 1,000 species of plants and animals. It is one of the world's most globally significant biodiversity hotspots and is home to some of the world's rarest species. Despite its status as a desert, the Mojave Desert's unique geography and ecosystem are being threatened by projects that alter and destroy ecosystems and have contributed to fires, invasive species, drought and other problems. The new target range, designed to be the largest shooting range in the western United States, would be constructed in the native habitat of the rare desert tortoise and would be located in the heart of the Greater Mojave Trails Ecological Reserve, a protected area of 520,000 acres that protects important wildlife and habitat. The project would also impact rare plants and endangered species, including the desert tortoise and the desert badger. The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) is currently accepting public comment on a proposed plan to develop the range. Once completed, the new shooting range would consist of 20 firing ranges and cover approximately 1,350 acres. Firing ranges are a common component of military training, and their construction and maintenance pose serious environmental threats to western lands. If the BLM acts on the plan, it would be the largest new shooting range in the West. The agency will take public comment through January 18, 2019. California's Mojave Desert is one of the world's most important, yet most vulnerable, regions for species conservation and recovery. The state has held unique legal protections for the desert under the Endangered Species Act for decades. The plan also comes as the federal government awards Western states a record amount of funding to fight wildfire. In California, state and federal officials are working to cut the threat of wildfires, but they are currently looking at spending cuts in other areas, including conservation and environmental protection. Scientists have been asking the government to protect the Mojave Desert for decades. Some worry that clearing the desert for shooting ranges could lead to more destruction. They cite years of discussion with the Trump Administration about the site, as well as statements from the Department of the Interior (DOI) indicating the agency is eyeing the area. The Center for Biological Diversity and Center for Biological Diversity of Northern California and the

The Magic Wand is a tool that you can use to select an area of an image and fill it with the specified color. The Gradient Tool allows you to draw a continuous line of any color, filling the canvas with the gradient. The Gradient editor is a tool that allows you to customize the gradient. The Pen tool allows you to draw on the image. Clicking once makes the tool act like a line, and clicking again makes it act like a circle. This allows you to easily shape objects such as a line, circle, ellipse or polygon. The Paint Bucket allows you to fill an area of an image. The Stroke option allows you to create a line by holding down Shift while making a selection. The Paint Bucket is not a tool, it is a palette. You can see how it works in this video tutorial. The Lasso tool is a feature that is built into the toolbox. This tool can be used to cut, copy, and paste an area or selection. This is useful for creating a mask or for removing objects from an image. The Eraser Tool allows you to erase a part of an image. This tool can be used to remove objects from an image and improve the overall look. The Eraser is not a tool, but a palette. See this video tutorial. The Gradient tool is a tool that allows you to draw a continuous gradient on the image. See this video tutorial for more details on how it works. The Pen tool is one of the most powerful tools in Photoshop. It allows you to draw shapes on the image. See this video tutorial for more information. The brushes tool allows you to create new brushes based on existing brushes. See this video tutorial for more information on how to use it. The Adjustment Layers are similar to the old channels in older versions of Photoshop. They are a new way of adding filters or other modifications to an image in Photoshop. To learn more, see this short video tutorial.
