(LF) Viet Nam: de facto leader Bui Tan An claims he is the legitimate leader of the Democratic Party of Vietnam (DPV) and his opponents are trying to take control of the party. On the evening of 19 February the Nguyen family members, led by his son Nguyen Thi Ngoc Chuc, took charge of the DPV secretariat, including the two party headquarters on Le Duan and Ha Dong Streets in Hanoi, with the help of armed guards. A protest was immediately organised by Bui Tan An and his supporters. The DPV, set up in 1965, has never been recognised by the State. It is accused of being a communist front, and its members are often imprisoned. Bui Tan An's supporters claim the Nguyen family is behind the smear campaign, using the DPV as cover. The DPV and a number of its affiliates and members have not been recognised by the government since the 1990s. The party's news website vn.dpv.org.vn has been inaccessible since 18 February. The "Doi Moi" (transformation) era has brought severe restrictions on freedom of expression, particularly on the internet. A web-based report from C1VN says that the DPV's news website was hijacked by a hacker, but this has not been confirmed. The hacked servers are thought to belong to members of the DPV. The DPV has received confidential, alleged police intelligence, reports from Hanoi, urging action against the DPV, and the arrests and closure of its offices. "We have received certain information from police agencies about a plot aimed at consolidating power and to change the party leadership. The government and the people of Vietnam deserve democratic process and respect for the DPV, and will not accept attempts to remove Bui Tan An from the DPV," said Bui Thac Chuc. The Hanoi court issued an arrest warrant for Bui Thac Chuc in December 2011 for his alleged conspiracy to overthrow the government. He is currently in prison in Danang. Nguyen Minh Dung, a lawyer from Saigon, was detained by police on 14 February in the Hai Van Dong District and is being kept in custody. Bui Thuc Chuc's driver was also arrested. The court issued arrest warrants for Bui Thuc Chuc, Tran Van Kh

Domestic help on film; Nick, Bob & Co HRT — In the film industry, domestic help usually presents itself in the form of a nursemaid or a housemaid, performing almost entirely the passive role of watching the children. In Domestic Help (Saaum Bharadwaj), on the other hand, the domestic help is perfectly independent. He is a young man — and an actor — who acts as a character in the story, while making the most of the contacts that he has made over the years. Domestic Help is the name of the film-maker, who tells his story through a series of interviews with the characters that he has come across over the years. The film-maker, who took to storytelling in Tamil after working as an assistant to Chola Natarajan ("Devi"), worked as the assistant to a couple of production managers and directors. A story from an incident in 2015 became a love story, with just a few characters. And so, in 2015, he started the film — which has not only used the contacts of many of these characters, but has also taken their photographs as actors, so that he can tell the story of the relationships he has had with them over the years. At first, Domestic Help was a one-man effort; he would just run to the open space near the police chowki to shoot. And thus began his journey through the region. The film was shot in 2010, at odd hours of the day. He asks the characters what they used to do, and he films their response. He takes the photographs. He talks to them about their experiences in the region. He leaves them little mementos. One of the questions that the film-maker asks the character — his buddy — is why they give a lot of importance to their parents, even in the face of losing them. "Saaum Bharadwaj has made some changes in the narrative that we've not seen before. When he talks about our parents, it's not just the elder ones — he talks about kids too. He talks about their shortcomings and the people they are bound to, and about the distance that they have created between themselves and their parents because of it. The question then becomes: is it a problem, and if so, how does it affect them?" "We now see kids who are ten years old, living on their own, indulging in
