Detection of insulin receptor autoantibodies in serum of newly diagnosed type I diabetic patients with metabolic decompensation. Recently, we described insulin receptor autoantibodies (IAA) as serological markers in a subgroup of patients with newly diagnosed type I diabetes mellitus (IDDM) with metabolic decompensation. The aim of the present study was to evaluate the specificity of IAA in patients with recent onset of diabetes. Fifty-nine patients with newly diagnosed IDDM, all of whom presented with severe metabolic decompensation (DR3 or DR4, HLA-DQ heterozygous), were studied and compared with 51 age- and sex-matched healthy controls. HLA-DQ heterozygosity was determined by a genotyping test. The presence of IAA in serum was detected by immunoprecipitation of iodinated receptors followed by autoradiography and immunoprecipitation with an anti-human IAA monoclonal antibody. The specificity of IAA was checked by blocking in a separate series of experiments. There was no significant difference between the two groups regarding age, sex and HLA-DQ genotype distribution. IAA were present in 27 of 59 (45%) patients and in 19 of 51 (37%) controls ( $p = NS$ ). HLA-DQ genotype analysis showed that no individual haplotype was associated with the presence of IAA. The specificity of IAA was tested by preincubating IAA-positive sera with a dose-dependent amount of specific insulin. The blocking effect was not dose-related. These findings show that serum IAA are not specific markers for diabetes mellitus and, in fact, their presence does not seem to be associated with a particular HLA-DQ genotype.
