Adobe Elements Unlike many other digital art programs, Adobe Elements (previously Acrobat) is a page layout program. It creates PDF files (a document format that embeds content) as well as Adobe Acrobat files for printing on paper and publishing on the web. Elements can do the following: * It can read and write PDF documents, as well as import and export them, making it the best program to convert PDFs to high-quality thumbnails for web use. You'll also use Elements to convert many other file types, such as Microsoft PowerPoint presentations, to PDF. * You can use Elements to create beautiful magazine layouts for print and as a way to publish PDFs on the web. * Elements provides a full toolset for advanced image editing—including an Auto Merge Layers feature that enables you to make quick and simple adjustments to a single image to make it appear more or less crisp and sharp. * * * ## Layers The image-editing world uses layers in a variety of ways, including how to work and edit in Photoshop. Some explanations of layers in Photoshop focus on the layering process rather than use. Sometimes the term _layer_ refers to a fill layer (such as Background), with other colors to be used for the image. Layers are the fundamental building blocks of images. You can overlay one on top of another to reveal and hide parts of an image at any time. Each layer is an individual object that contains all the features of the specific image. In some programs, layers can be hidden, moved, resized, moved again, removed, turned invisible, and so on. In Photoshop, layers are available in the Layers palette on the left side of the program and are easily moved around in their own palette window. In addition to the ability to create, move, and resize layers, you also have the ability to change layer order, add transparency, and hide the background for a layer. You can even duplicate or merge layers to create complex compositions. You can also easily move individual color-treated layers to change their composition. Here's an example of layers in Photoshop, showing a group of layers in the Layers palette, and what happens when you move and resize layers: From this example, you can see that

On Sunday, the Trump administration issued a restriction on family planning coverage, in an effort to roll back women's reproductive rights. Under the new rules, planned parenthood coverage will now be limited to two years unless the person has an unrelated major illness. That would mean the 26,000 clinics nationwide that provide abortions would likely have to close in order to cover a single pregnancy, according to ProPublica. At least two of the seven justices who will hear arguments in October have made public statements about abortion during their political careers — with one Democrat joining the majority during the vote to overturn Roe v. Wade in 1973 and another opposing the decision. The delay means that unless the Court agrees to reconsider its ruling in its entirety, Planned Parenthood will be able to continue providing abortions in every state without interference from the federal government. During oral arguments, which took place in mid-September, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who wrote the opinion in 1973, said she was determined to decide the case in a way that wouldn't result in a precedent she couldn't live with. But with Donald Trump in office, the fate of reproductive rights in the United States is in the hands of a seven-person court, and several of them have a history of casting votes that differ from the majority. In July, Brett Kavanaugh was confirmed to the Supreme Court. With his appointment, conservative justices gained four seats on the Court. Though they will have the power to overturn Roe v. Wade, they will also have a much more conservative bench to pick from. Kavanaugh wrote a 1999 memo while serving as a staff attorney in the office of independent counsel Kenneth Starr, which former President Bill Clinton characterized as a "political hit job" on his wife during an interview with 60 Minutes in 1999. In the memo, Kavanaugh wrote that the president's statements about Monica Lewinsky could be classified as obstruction of justice, saying that Clinton's conduct "was clearly criminal and the remedy was impeachment." He told 60 Minutes that Clinton's actions were a "political hit job." "I think you have a lot of people who are smart and will tell you it's a political hit job. And I think they're just dead right," Kavanaugh told the network. Kavanaugh's views on guns have been in the news since he was tapped for a seat on the Supreme Court, with many

A former employee at the Oconee County Jail claims the facility is not following proper protocol when it comes to the spread of coronavirus, according to WYFF-TV. The employee — who spoke with WYFF on the condition of anonymity — has worked as a medical clerk since July 1. The employee claims that Oconee County isn't taking proper precautions to prevent the spread of COVID-19. "I feel like we are getting more calls than we did before [the pandemic]," the employee told the news outlet. "The calls that are coming in, they're more serious than they were the last couple of weeks that I worked here." ADVERTISEMENT According to WYFF, the jail will no longer be able to hold prisoners overnight after inmates are released early. The employee said that the facility hasn't even confirmed the presence of COVID-19 among its employees or prisoners. "I'm just hopeful that they are doing the right things, just making sure that their employees are safe and making sure that the inmates are safe," the former employee told WYFF. "Nobody is doing it with any sort of proactivity." Oconee County Sheriff Richard Glenn said that his facility has tried to follow guidelines set forth by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). Glenn told the news outlet that the facility has implemented the proper number of hand sanitizer stations in a short amount of time. Glenn added that the county is also planning to build an outhouse next to the jail's reception area. "We're planning to have an emergency outhouse for our staff," Glenn said. "That will allow staff to stay hydrated, and we're hoping that that helps them." ADVERTISEMENT The Oconee County Sheriff's Office could not be reached for comment by press time. It is unclear how many inmates have been transferred to other facilities in the region, because other jails are not being transparent about their inmate populations. A spokesman for the Horry County Detention Center told WIS-TV that Horry County has processed thousands of inmates to other county-owned facilities. "This morning, I spoke with the Sheriff's Office about the transfer to other jail facilities," S.C
