Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a rotary electronic apparatus, and more particularly, to a rotary electronic apparatus which can be operated manually or powered by a motor and having a function of a typical electronic pen. 2. Description of the Related Art Recently, as electronic apparatuses are being developed to have multifunction and small sizes, an electronic pen capable of providing a variety of functionalities also becomes small in size. Generally, a typical electronic pen is operated by rotating an input portion included in an electronic pen about a pen point. In addition, the electronic pen is widely used for not only a computer but also a drawing device. However, most electronic pens described above are primarily operated by an electromagnetic driving unit or by a power of a battery. That is, these electronic pens are used for a long time by a power from a power source, and thus a separate power source for the electronic pen is required for performing an operation thereof. In addition, the power source is depleted when the electronic pen is continuously used for a long time. When the power source is depleted, the electronic pen may not be able to operate normally.3 Things You Can Do To Be More Successful at Dating, Love & Relationships All of us have experienced so many heartbreaks from failed relationships that made us lose hope and stopped us from trying again. Positive Feedback Loop Feedback loops and the system they create are at the heart of the feedback system, a core feature of every self-organizing system. Such a system has three components. Three. It is an interaction between two or more systems. A feedback loop is a physical, real-time interaction between two systems; it is usually a negative feedback loop. Feedback is important for a controlled system. Feedback is the ability of a system to either evaluate its own output (output feedback) or its current condition (status feedback). The extent to which a system can achieve its goal depends upon its ability to use feedback for control of its own output. Feedback has been argued to be the key to successful self-organisation, and has been shown to be a primary cause in cellular differentiation, the natural emergence of individual cells from the tissue of a multicellular organism. The concept has also been applied by engineers to self-regulating technical systems, with feedback the means by which a control system continually alters its parameters in order to maintain its outputs within specified limits. In social systems, individual feedback loops may be positive or negative. Positive feedback, also known as feedforward, is a term from control theory. It describes a self-reinforcing feedback loop. The loop is closed in the opposite direction as the system. If one end is positive, the other is negative. In its simplest form, this is illustrated by a mobile object moving. The object moving tends to increase its speed and thereby gain more distance per unit time. This will only continue until the object is eventually stopped, at which point the object will be moving in the opposite direction. This is a negative feedback loop. It leads to its own termination. It is often used to describe a positive feedback loop in a system of electrical current. If a loop is closed in the correct direction, the direction of the current may become extremely large. A positive feedback loop occurs when a system stimulates itself or its
