The center of pressure (CoP) of humans and animals as well as engineered systems is typically seen as a macroscopic measure of the balance of the system. In a human standing or running, the body CoP (BCoP) is located at the center of body mass and thus, it is defined as the primary articulating CoP of the lower limbs. The purpose of this paper is to analyze the distribution of BCoP in a pendulum that simulates the human running CoP. The pendulum moves in-phase or anti-phase with the ground, which gives a measure of the frequency or the contribution of BCoP to the overall CoP of the pendulum. The distribution and its response to linear, stochastic, and harmonic perturbations were studied as the phase lag of the pendulum was varied. As a result, the shape of BCoP is similar to that of the CoP of a superposition of a Fourier series and a trigonometric polynomial, that is, BCoP can be seen as a circular harmonic oscillator. The attenuation in the frequency response of BCoP to the linear perturbations was maximum at the resonance frequency and resulted in a higher response to the first harmonic when the perturbation was applied with the phase lag of -90°. For the stochastic perturbation, the response of BCoP was higher compared to the total CoP for the frequency range above the resonance, whereas, it was near zero for the frequency range below the resonance. The results of this study suggest that a virtual pendulum could be developed with the design of the phase lag in the distribution of BCoP to make the maximum response of the system to the stochastic perturbations.Toward a Reagent-Free One-Step Sequential Protein Modification Using Copper-Catalyzed Azide Alkyne Cycloaddition. I am watching the TV series called "England's Greatest Daughters". Now in the programme the actress who plays lady Isabel says that after she retired from acting she turned to being a financial planner. However, the person who interviewed her says “a daughter of a lord” which caused her to react. What does “a daughter of a lord” mean? A: Your quote implies that she is claiming nobility, or at least wealth, and some status. I don't know how old she is, but it sounds like she is in her late forties, or even mid forties; she would not be using the phrase if she was "a daughter of twenty year-old Meghan Markle". But never mind that. It's easy to get bent out of shape because I don't have the exact number of people who shared a link to that post in the Facebook feed. What's the harm in a few people sharing an article or two for the purpose of discussion, as long as it's not being manipulated? I've been interviewing speakers at a conference for several years, and I've had quite a few “known knowns,” industry veterans who have had the good fortune to know and work with a lot of people in their field. Everyone seems to know people who have had a great experience with a coach, or at least know people who have worked with one and really benefited from it. They've heard the stories from people on social media who say that so-and-so coached them, and they find it hard to imagine such a thing not working. But for whatever reason, I've never asked these people what they think about working with a coach. So I was doing some reading around the subject, and stumbled across a story from the New York Times. Under the title, “Deciding Between a Coach and a Therapist,

Tom Crouch (Rapee) Tom Crouch was a friend of Guy Fawkes and his last words were “By God!”. Tom didn’t get to see the celebrations at Paul’s Cross until the following evening and then he went without having slept for two days and nights. He came to the scaffold fully armed. He said the following lines:- Give me leave to tell you, For a wedding garment I am appareled: I must confess I am no friar, I am plain Tom Cutbush, a countryman. I neither was born under a canopy, Nor of the female kind, but of a man; And now I stand to the world but as I was, Save that my gown is homely, which makes me sad. I had a little book, and for lack of better means (Then being ripe for murder) I have exchanged my bayonet For a musket ball. So, when you see me, look upon my shroud.Measles is caused by the highly contagious virus. It affects the skin and eyes, causing fever, cough, runny nose, and a sore, pink eye. It can also cause a rash that develops 3-5 days after contracting the virus. It is a vaccine-preventable disease that is spread by the respiratory droplets from an infected person. Measles can cause severe complications such as pneumonia and encephalitis. If not treated properly, it can also cause death. The symptoms of measles tend to appear about two weeks after an infection. The risk of being exposed to measles remains high for a few weeks to months after the initial infection.Search If you are a student of history you’ve probably heard of the Chesapeake-Leopard slave trade, at least until you were younger. It’s one of those lessons that seems like it should be taught in a classroom in front of a chalkboard with a loud Whack! at the end and an orange slip of paper with a line of incomprehensible numbers on it. It’s the concept of an old understanding about humans and their value in the world – that they are sub-human property. It’s often
