Photoshop's many tools are separate components that perform a specific task — for example, the crop tool is used to crop an image. At its core, Photoshop is a graphics creation program that enables any image to be modified and manipulated. To make changes and alterations to your image without risking losing everything in the process, Photoshop includes an auto-save function that saves your work automatically before you decide to abandon it. Photoshop has many other tools that save your work. In addition to the regular image file formats and EPS, TIFF, and GIF, Photoshop includes a collection of its own proprietary formats and editing features. It has support for both JPEG and TIFF images, as well as eight different resolution file formats (including PNG, GIF, EPS, JPEG, and TIFF) that enable users to add text, drawing, or graphics to an image and to alter its brightness, color, and contrast. Also, the way you edit your image depends on what you want to do — you can create a new image, adjust an existing one, or simply fix damage in an image that you created. Photoshop is not for everyone. While you don't need to be a graphic designer or fine artist to use Photoshop, you do need to be a reasonably proficient user of graphics creation and editing tools to get maximum benefit from the program. However, its capabilities are also such that it's perfect for hobbyists and people who want to improve their skills in digital graphics. Understanding Digital Image Files Photoshop is a raster graphics program, which means that unlike the vector-based programs such as Illustrator, InDesign, and Quark XPress that you find in print design, Photoshop is used to create, manipulate, and edit bitmapped raster images (see Figure 3-1). Although Photoshop has many features that enable you to create and manipulate a variety of types of images, for the purposes of this book, I concentrate on its capabilities in the areas of editing graphics: Figure 3-1: Photoshop enables you to create, manipulate, and edit bitmapped raster images. Software for creating the output The program's default output medium is the Photoshop Portable Document Format (PSD), which enables you to save your work in a file format that can be opened in a variety of other programs. Software for creating the input The program has a range of input file formats that enable it to open and modify all types of file formats.

Q: How to check if a class is assigned to an object in C++? class Student { string name; int id; public: Student(string n, int i) : name(n), id(i) {} }; class Classroom { vector students; public: void addStudent(string n, int i) { students.push_back(Student(n,i)); } }; int main() { Classroom c; c.addStudent("Bob",123); // How to know if Student "Bob" is assigned to a student in Classroom? // How to know if Classroom "c" has a Student named "Bob" stored? } A: Classroom has a vector of StuDate. Each Student has a string. Each Student also has an int. The only thing your classes have in common is that they have a name and an id. If a Student is not the same as a Student (or a vector of Students) than those classes don't share anything in common. The only way in which a class with an id or name (but without a vector) can relate to a Classroom is through the vector of StuDate that is a member of Classroom. That's the only way that they share a relationship. Letterpress, Inc. v. CII Impress Letterpress, Inc. v. CII Impress, Inc., No. 07-CV-5881 (S.D.N.Y., Apr. 1, 2008), was a trademark infringement suit brought by letterpress company Letterpress, Inc. against competitor CII Impress, Inc. The case lasted four years and the verdict in favor of Letterpress Inc. was the first such verdict against a competitor of Letterpress, Inc., in New York State courts, and only the second such verdict in the history of the United States. The appeal During the four-year lawsuit the parties embarked on a reputation marketing campaign, with the outcome of both companies' efforts detailed in a New York Daily News article on November 21, 2006. The Court Letterpress appealed the verdict, arguing that the trial court erred in holding that

In an important historical decision, the Supreme Court of India, on 28th November 2014, has ordered the release of Sarabjit Singh, a prisoner in the Kathua jail, Jammu, who has been on a hunger strike since 4th April 2014. Sarabjit Singh was a resident of India and is convicted of terrorism charges, involving the murder of two people and attempted murder of three other people. These murder and attempted murder cases relate to the 1984 attack on the Golden Temple in Amritsar. This is an attack that took place on and about 1st June, 1984 in the Golden Temple complex. Sarabjit Singh, a resident of Pakistan, was the one who planned the attack and allegedly executed it. During the trial, Sarabjit Singh's confession was made and he has been charged with high treason and murder. Also, Sarabjit Singh has been convicted and given the death sentence. Sarabjit Singh has been on a hunger strike for the past 19 days and had to be force-fed with a tube. It is a known fact that Sarabjit Singh is a political prisoner, as he was charged with terrorism. It is also a known fact that that he was convicted of terrorism charges and given the death sentence. Now, the above point is what irked the government and the state administration in India. Let me sum up the thing and bring to the focus the real issue On 1st June, 1984, a large number of Sikh pilgrims took out a march on to the Harmandir Sahib (the Golden Temple) in the Amritsar city of Punjab. They took out a march and by the next morning, the carnage had started. The terrorists killed 46 Sikhs, including 5 foreign tourists. On 19th June, 1990, Sarabjit Singh, a resident of Pakistan, was arrested by the Indian authorities and charged with murder, kidnapping and bombing. Sarabjit Singh confessed and was found guilty of terrorism charges. It is a known fact that Sarabjit Singh was charged with high treason by the Indian government. He was also held responsible for the 2 killings and 3 attempted killings of innocent people and tried, convicted and sentenced to death by the high court in the state of Punjab on 16th November, 1990. The Sikh nation, in their heart and mind, feels that Sarabjit Singh is just and fair for receiving justice. They feel that it is an injustice done
