Typing Tutor for Arabic-English Keyboard $ Software for learning to type onÂ .China has for years been casting a tight leash on its beloved national parks. Since late April, visitors to Tian Shan National Park in northwest China's Xinjiang Uighur Autonomous Region have been met with strict entry restrictions that have been more strictly enforced than usual, according to reports. Migrants in the area, where ethnic Uighurs make up over 60 percent of the population, make up about half of the park's 2 million annual visitors. Police have been patrolling park campsites, and many of the tents have been moved, perhaps to reduce the risk of forest fires, the AP reports. The strict security measures come as China is under pressure to address its complicated relationship with Uighurs, who have been protesting in recent months against what they see as mistreatment by police and the central government. A particularly violent protest on March 2 resulted in the deaths of at least 44 people, the majority of them Uighurs. Human rights groups have long accused Chinese authorities of clamping down on ethnic Uighurs. "Whenever protest happens, Beijing does exactly what they did in 2012 — they clamp down on people," Eunice Yoon, a researcher at Human Rights Watch, told the Guardian.

Dangerous conditions Most of the border areas with countries like Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan where the camps sit are in the barren, snowy Tianshan Mountains, whose tall peaks and deep ravines are home to bears and other creatures that live nowhere else. Uighurs are the native inhabitants of Xinjiang, but an influx of Han Chinese — China's majority ethnic group — have moved in in recent years. The cities have long been notorious for crime and poor quality of living conditions, and the camps aim to provide a degree of social safety net and support for those dislocated by their crackdown on the mostly-Muslim minority. "[The crackdown] is aimed to push Uighurs into the refugee camps," Yoon told the Guardian. "Xinjiang is very important for the [Chinese] government, the whole idea is to portray the Uighurs as a threat, that they're all terrorists." People make their way towards a refugee camp in north China's Xinjiang Uighur Autonomous Region.
