Resident Commissioner for the Cook Islands The Resident Commissioner for the Cook Islands is a political position within the Cook Islands government. The Cook Islands is a dependent territory of New Zealand. The territory was first selfgoverning in 1979, becoming fully self-governing in 1987. Prior to 1979, the Parliament of New Zealand represented the Cook Islands in New Zealand. The position of Resident Commissioner was created by the Cook Islands Act 1979. It is an appointed position, held by the Governor-General of New Zealand. The position replaced the earlier Cook Islands High Commissioner and Deputy High Commissioner and became the second highest position in the Cook Islands after the Prime Minister. The first Resident Commissioner was Michael Williams, who held the position from 1979 to 1987. He was succeeded by Richard Prebble in 1988. The Resident Commissioner is a member of the Cook Islands Cabinet and supports the Prime Minister in the Council of the Cook Islands. Over the past two decades, single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) have been identified in most G protein-coupled receptors (GPCRs) and have been shown to influence drug response. Gene-specific agonists and antagonists have been developed that selectively target each SNP, demonstrating that receptor polymorphisms can directly alter cellular responses to signaling. Recently, multiple lines of evidence have revealed that GPCR polymorphisms that lead to gain-of-function (GOF) constitutive activation are potential risk factors for cardiac disease and/or cancer. In this review, we discuss the potential clinical impact of these mutations

Rosenstein offered few details about his conversations with President Trump and other senior lustice Department officials about wearing a wire to secretly record conversations with the president, but they said Rosenstein was not seriously considering it. "He did not ask the question of whether he should record a conversation with the president of the United States," lawyer Bill Burck said in an interview Friday with NPR's "Morning Edition." "That is a question that many lawyers are trained to ask." Burck said Rosenstein told him that he did not wear a wire or take notes of conversations with the president because he wanted to be truthful in his reports to special counsel Robert Mueller. "There is nothing that he does not want to disclose in this investigation." Rosenstein's remarks to Burck were made in an interview that was supposed to be off the record. But Burck, who serves as the public face of an effort by Rosenstein's aides to depict him as a stalwart defender of the independence of the Justice Department, told NPR that Rosenstein wanted to tell
