Effects of Maternal Pre-pregnancy Overweight on a Child's Early-Onset Type 2 Diabetes Risk in the Nurses' Health Study II (NHSII). This study sought to examine the associations between maternal prepregnancy overweight status and the risk of an early-onset type 2 diabetes in children, taking into account adjustment for neonatal and early childhood characteristics. This is a prospective cohort study. NHSII study members who had live-born singletons with available information on maternal body mass index (BMI) at prepregnancy (1990) and neonatal and early childhood characteristics were eligible for the current study (n = 64,715). A sex-specific, age-specific, and race-specific tertile of the association between maternal prepregnancy BMI and child's diabetes risk was examined using Poisson regression with and without adjustment for neonatal and early childhood characteristics. The adjusted relative risk for developing diabetes in children who had maternal overweight or obesity compared with underweight mothers at prepregnancy was 1.34 (95% CI = 1.03-1.74) in girls and 1.61 (95% CI = 1.07-2.41) in boys. A similar result of higher relative risk for type 2 diabetes in children whose mothers were overweight or obese was found in both boys and girls after adjustment for neonatal and early childhood characteristics. Maternal prepregnancy overweight status was associated with an increased risk of type 2 diabetes in children. Lower maternal gestational weight gain and higher birth weight could mediate this risk. Maternal prepregnancy overweight status also increased the risk of type 2 diabetes in children in a dose-response manner. This invention relates to a device and method
