This invention relates generally to the control of the operation of internal combustion engines, and more particularly to the use of a sensing of the degree of misfire of a particular cylinder by sensing the variation in angular position of the crankshaft of an internal combustion engine. In the past, many methods of controlling the operation of an engine based upon the misfire have been attempted. Although, in general, one particular method of sensing misfire has been found to be more efficient than others, it is also noted that the structures associated with such methods are not desirable from a manufacturing viewpoint, as they are more subject to malfunction during the first time the device is operated. Additionally, it is desirable for such devices to be capable of being utilized in a multi-cylinder engine. Accordingly, it is an object of the present invention to provide a method and apparatus for controlling the operation of an internal combustion engine in response to a sensed cylinder misfire. Another object of the present invention is to provide a method and apparatus for sensing the degree of misfire of one cylinder by monitoring the angular position of a crankshaft of a multi-cylinder engine. Yet another object of the present invention is to provide a method and apparatus for accurately and simply measuring the degree of misfire of a cylinder based on the angular rotation of the crankshaft. Yet another object of the present invention is to provide a method and apparatus of sensing cylinder misfire that is inexpensive and simple to install, and also allows for a simple installation of the engine
