Instead of this $subs = array("");
foreach ($subs as $sub) { $subs[] = $sub. $i; } Use this code: $subs = array_fill(0, count($subs), ""); This will create an array with null values, which you can easily concatenate, and it won't crash if the array is empty or has an odd count of elements, like in your case. Look, no

Alex Russell's X's & O's -- Marco Cianciolo joins goodfellas in the commentary. ( Grindecan railway station Grindecan railway station is a railway station serving the village of Grindecan, North Yorkshire, England. The station is located on the Esk Valley line from York and south-west of via the Stainforth and Kexby Line. History The station was opened on 15 December 1899 and originally known as Grindyke by the Fox and Goose. The station, situated at the nearby village of Grindecan, was built to cater for the needs of the local coal mine, Grindicoke Colliery that lay to the north of the station. Facilities The station is unmanned and has a limited passenger services timetable. Train running time from this station is one of the shortest on the line, due to the fact that the station is on a single track line. The station can be accessed by a small turning circle in the single track section of the line just south of the station itself. The station is not owned by Network Rail, but by the East Coast Main Line Company. The ticket office is at nearby Tithby station, but there is no ticket machine at this station. As such, passengers must buy train tickets on a train that has stopped at this station or collect them as part of a through ticket. The ticket for the first train of the day, which passes Grindyke at 7:05am, costs £7.10 for a standard class return, or £5.80 for a standard class one-way. The ticket machine will give out a ticket for the train departing at 11:40am which can only be used for trains up to and including 7:20pm. Services The station is served by a basic hourly local service between York and.
