Ultra wideband (UWB) systems and products (e.g., UWB transceivers, UWB transponder modules, UWB transceiver modules) are often used to transmit and receive high data rate signals. For example, one or more antenna coils may be used to transmit signals to and/or receive signals from UWB transceiver modules that are coupled to a wideband communication signal, which may be similar to a General Packet Radio Service (GPRS) signal, a Universal Mobile Telecommunications System (UMTS) signal, or a Global System for Mobile Communications (GSM) signal. As the foregoing examples illustrate, when a UWB signal is transmitted from an antenna coil, it is desirable for this UWB signal to be coupled to the antenna coil in the same manner as a GPRS signal is coupled to an antenna coil (e.g., to a mobile device). However, in many scenarios, the coupling may be or become much weaker. For example, the transmitting power of a UWB signal may be substantially lower than the power of a GPRS signal because of the different frequency ranges (e.g., UWB and GPRS) at which the UWB and GPRS signals are transmitted. Consequently, a robust implementation of UWB systems and/or products is needed.
