Protein K/protein C complex binding domain Protein K/protein C complex binding domain is a conserved domain superfamily that is present in diverse groups of proteins from all three superkingdoms. This domain was first identified in the protein K family of proteins. These include the protein K precursor, the serpin KAZAL, and protein C. The protein K family is composed of paralogous proteins that are found in diverse organisms from fungi to mammals. These proteins are involved in embryonic development. Another protein family whose members contain this domain are serpins. Serpins are a superfamily of protease inhibitors, also found in many organisms.

FIFA (Fédération Internationale de Football Association) is a series of association football video games published by Electronic Arts. The series is the 2D football video game series, with each main title having about 3 million copies sold per year.[3] History of the series FIFA 2000 In 1999 EA Sports was given the contract to develop a successor to EA's popular FIFA series. It was decided to go back to the original Konami concept of the game. EA's focus was to appeal to a wider audience, with gameplay elements that reflected the modern game of football. EA Sports looked for and found franchise stars like Ronaldo, but also started to look for unknown and sometimes amateur players, as it wanted to change the idea of the game from association football to the game's best footballers. FIFA 2001 In 2001 EA Sports FIFA ran into problems as Japan's salary cap violations forced Konami to sell their part in the franchise to EA. EA Sports declined to continue the franchise. A new license was granted to EA Sports which caused the creation of the classic FIFA branding for EA's upcoming EA SPORTS FIFA games. The name was chosen by the marketers of the game to establish a new "simplicity and functionality" identity and to avoid a "confusing" moniker like "PES" or "Pro Evolution Soccer" (the name FIFA came from football, FIFA was the first English acronym for "Football Association of International Federation"). The license for the series was then given to EA Sports as a result of EA Sports winning the bid for the FIFA brand name and control over the intellectual property rights to the FIFA brand name and branding. Gameplay FIFA was a series of team and player focused sports games that had become extremely successful when 3D team and player-management games became popular. But EA wanted to take the franchise into the next generation. This time around they wanted to change the game from 3D to 2D, which would allow them to make the game more closely resemble the real-world sport in action. With this, they could make the game more accessible, allowing many more people to play the game. In addition, they wanted to integrate a new real-life style of gameplay. For instance, instead of controlling a team on the pitch in a 3D third-person perspective, they wanted to adopt a first-person perspective, enabling players to view the action from the players' point of view. The camera would be
