The aim of this study was to evaluate the clinical and biochemical aspects of patients with high methylmalonic aciduria and to analyze the molecular basis of the disorder in the Brazilian population. Sixty-five cases of methylmalonic aciduria were collected in this study, consisting of 52 patients with the classic form (OMIM 257100) and 13 cases of nonclassic methylmalonic aciduria (OMIM 600664) with methylmalonate accumulation in the blood only. Their clinical picture and clinical, biochemical and molecular findings were analyzed. The common clinical presentation is of an acute metabolic decompensation associated with neurological and psychological dysfunctions, culminating with a rapid progression of the disease with a short life expectancy and death in the first year of life. Thirteen patients had long-lasting neurological disorders. Molecular studies showed an insertion of a base transversion G to T in codon 56 of the methyl 595f342e71
