Z-Dossier zgechecken ist z.A versatile method to synthesize hemi-interpenetrated carbons by self-assembly from lignin-derived phenolic monomers. A synthetic strategy is reported for the preparation of hemi-interpenetrated carbons by self-assembly. A method is described to synthesize a dicarboxylic monomer from monomeric phenols produced by lignin deconstruction. This dicarboxylic monomer was then used for the self-assembly of carbon with a range of monomer combinations by standard protocols to obtain hemi-interpenetrated carbons (HIPC). The most efficient method for the preparation of HIPC relied on a combination of dicarboxylic monomer and phenolic monomers, which formed carbon in the presence of water, decoupling the dicarboxylic monomer from any preparative steps. Interestingly, in these HIPC, the concentration of lignin-derived phenolic monomers had a major effect on the pore size distribution. The synthesis of the carbons reported provides a versatile method for the preparation of novel materials from common renewable resources. DESCRIPTION: (Adapted from the applicant's abstract and Specific Aims) This project seeks to identify mechanisms that regulate gastrointestinal (GI) nutrient absorption. Glucagon-like peptide-1 (GLP-1) receptors exist in brain, peripheral tissues and in the GI tract. GLP-1 receptors are expressed in a distinct subset of intestinal epithelial cells that are coupled to the cyclic AMP cascade. GLP-1 stimulates nutrient absorption by activating secretion of the cotrans
