To determine the frequency of urological pathologies in Guinea-Bissau as well as the pathogens involved, we performed a prospective study of common urological pathologies, from November 2004 to October 2005, in patients aged 15 years or older presenting at 5 hospitals in Bissau. The overall incidence rate of urological pathologies was 959 per 100,000 inhabitants/year (Cl 95% 810-1090). The major urological pathologies seen were benign prostate hyperplasia (n = 123, 13.4%), urolithiasis (n = 276, 30.3%), ureteral calculi (n = 105, 11.4%), and urological infections (n = 161, 17.6%). The overall prevalence of urological pathologies was of 2.5% (137 cases). Significant urinary tract infections were observed in 103 patients (11.2%), of whom 98 (92.5%) had lower urinary tract symptoms. Urine cultures were performed in all patients who had symptoms of lower urinary tract infections. Thirty-three patients (15.8%) were diagnosed as having urinary schistosomiasis and 9 (4.4%) as having e

Economics is all about values. It is not just numbers and data. It is an inquiry into what is valued and what is not, and why. It is about why one public policy is better than another. It is about choices: either a buyer or seller both have incomes and goods. It should be a pretty straight choice between the two. But every good thing has a price. And every buyer and seller of every good is assumed to be out for what their own free choice, not what others want to pay or give them. Asking: why does one good cost more than another good? What is the difference between the goods? How does one estimate the costs of production? How does one estimate what others will be willing to pay for this good? It is quite easy, at least for me, to calculate the prices. I just keep subtracting out the cost of production is better than another. It is about why one private solution is better than another. It is about choices. Markets are quite obvious choices 648931e174
