I own several rental properties in the Bay Area. I use a separate checking account, and pay my income taxes quarterly like a corporation. For each quarter I am supposed to be able to itemize and deduct $100 of my interest from my taxable income. I file my tax returns online for each quarter. I've been doing this for years with no problem. For the most part, this has been a win/win situation for me. I've enjoyed running my properties more, while earning a substantial amount of passive income. Here's the problem. I've never once in any of my federal tax returns for the years I own rental properties (over the last few years), ever claimed any deduction for mortgage interest. It seems as if most people don't even claim this deduction. I could think of many reasons why, but none come to mind. Am I missing something here? Has this ever been allowed? If it is allowed, why don't I ever see a tax deduction for mortgage interest in my tax returns? If it is not allowed, why not? A: This is indeed allowable, and is one of the most important deductions in calculating your real estate income. The reason for this is because interest is calculated on a GAAP basis. Interest paid on a line of credit is included in your income just like rent. However, interest that is paid on a mortgage is not actually income to you, but is an expense, since the money for the mortgage is an advance against future rent income. Interest from a mortgage

All this recent family attention has made me hungry to hear stories about growing up in the world of comics. Well, I guess some of the non-spoiler stuff is out of the way, but here's what else is coming up in the next few weeks! As part of the C2E2 Comic Con Chicago 2013 experience, I'll be judging the Best Cartoonist of the Year contest, with special guest judge the great and prolific Steve Ditko, creator of Spider-Man and Doctor Strange. I've also got a Day job, so my next column will be on Thursday, March 21, with some editor-trivia (mostly about me and the workload I usually end up with) and a review of Michael Moore's new documentary, "The Awful Truth." If you have any questions for me, this will be my last column until next week. To ask your questions, email me at bill.rayblogger@me.com or use the comments at the end of the column. One last thing: The summer has been a very busy time for me, so I haven't been working much on my comics blog. But I expect to be back in the regular schedule soon. I'll be monitoring the comments here as well, so keep an eye out. And of course, I'll be posting a new webcomic this week (likely Monday), so check back then! Thanks, and enjoy the ride. Weekly Webcomic Reviews Return! A few things to note: the blog is returning weekly. There was too much going on last week, so I didn't get to post a column, but don't worry: we're back. And I'll post a couple
