The interferon (IFN) signaling pathway is a key component of innate immunity and is essential in host defense against viral infections. IFN signaling requires the generation of the antiviral proinflammatory cytokines IFNα and IFNβ. Using the Tet-Off system, we generated a stable Sanger Institute (Sanger I) murine embryonic stem cell line lacking endogenous IRF35 expression and found that the absence of IRF35 leads to a complete block of IFNα-dependent transcriptional activation and the expression of antiviral proteins. We provide the first direct evidence that IRF35 is an essential component of IFN-mediated gene transcription and identify IRF35 as a novel important antiviral effector molecule.The PS4 is one of the best selling console of all time, and it looks like the game console has already made a slight comeback to the market.
