users, benefits, and other content. Perhaps you use a tablet to take pictures of the process. Or use paper. Markopolis is a tool for creating mind maps. It supports easy linking to objects, tasks, stakeholders, records, or datasets. It's perfect for taming a messy process, brainstorming, and sharing knowledge. How to use Mindmap: Write content on your mind map page for your project Use text boxes to add notes, or import files. Add photos, links, video, documents, or phone numbers. You can link text boxes to other parts of your mind map. You can also link text boxes to files on local devices and cloud services. Use the drag and drop feature to import or export content At the bottom, there is a little Mindmap Network. Once you choose a source and destination, all the objects in that group will be made available to your mind map. To finish a Mindmap, you can preview it or publish it to a social sharing web site, or send an email to the team to share with co-workers. Zoom in and out and pan left and right to see what's linked. There's a picture of your mind map at the top-center. Once you have finished your mind map, you can export it to the web with the Export menu. If you choose to import content to a mind map, or link an existing mind map with a project, Markopolis will find all images with the shared file name. Once you choose a file and drag it to the page, the image will appear. If you import a file with multiple parts, Markopolis will split the file into multiple pages. To share your mind map, you can email it
